LehrPuls

FOR TEACHING & LEARNING AND E-LEARNING CENTERS

A tool that gets instructors to reflect — because it shows them their own teaching.

Live questions are the lowest-threshold entry into active learning. LehrPuls goes one step further: the analytics make visible where a course stumbles. For your consulting this means instructors arrive with evidence, not gut feeling — and without a privacy hurdle.

Students assess themselves

Every question is feedback to the person: "I've got this — not that yet." Formative assessment, anonymous, no grade.

Instructors learn from data

Difficulty, discrimination, response times, trends across semesters — data-informed teaching without extra effort.

No hurdle for your recommendation

No account, no cloud, no data processor. The trial has no time limit — workshops need no licenses.

Teaching patterns LehrPuls supports

- Peer instruction (Mazur): two rounds, discussion in between, gain visible
- Muddiest point and one-minute paper as open questions with answer clusters
- Confidence rating and self-assessment on a scale
- Think-pair-share with groups, anonymous too; station rotation with parallel blocks

For your work

- Question templates per discipline to import ("Ten questions that work in every lecture")
- Baton: pass question banks around the team, distribute read-only copies
- Manual, quick reference, flyer and privacy dossier for your tool list
- Demo at your center: with real questions in the room and the analytics afterwards

Finding from our own pilot (university of applied sciences, winter term 2026/27): In four of eight peer-instruction questions the share of correct answers rose in the second round (for example from 71 to 84 percent); in the others it was already at 97 to 100 percent in round one — the question was too easy for peer instruction. Findings like these give consulting conversations substance.

A conversation, a demo, a pilot

I am happy to show LehrPuls at your center — one hour, with live questions and analytics. Built by an instructor for instructors: LehrPuls grows out of real university teaching in Austria.
